Share this: I look at my phone's screen, lie down on the couch and the water inside my bloodstream rushes back to where it was in the day, when I was working on my book. Soon, I'll be back to living in the office, back to working hours. Back to the psychic burden of not knowing what I'll do. Last week I shared an email to colleagues that told the story of my going into the cold water that day. I left it out of the book, but I felt I needed to share it now, to show how hard this has been for me. Since that day, I've been paranoid and self-destructive. I've been unhappy, depressed, enraged and reduced to tears by phone calls from my one best friend, Robert. I'm grateful for people
