Titan Interactive and Kōga look back at 2018 The past year has been full of new challenges for Titan, not the least of which is managing to squeeze everything we'd set out to do onto the size of a disc. There are, of course, no small tasks setting up and maintaining a gaming operation, so it's especially impressive how well Kōga has scaled up while also keeping the operations running smoothly. We also continue to face the need to make Kōga as accessible to players who aren't familiar with Japanese, a hurdle that's been an issue since the game's original launch in 2015. OTHER - Prologue The hot summer was invading the cool night as the fireflies light up the plain, the clear night sky was filled with stars and moon...it was a beautiful night. Music was played from the lively town. A man wearing a long cotton shirt and dark pants walked slowly and quietly, the moonlight gleamed on his face as he was going towards the house. He felt something touching his hand but he did not pull his hand back. The stranger turned around and looked into the stranger's eyes. The stranger's eyes were shining and calm. The man whose eyes were shining showed the information. The name of the stranger was an unknown person, his appearance had a detailed description and his way of life was taken down like a diary. Where would this unknown person be going to? Why did he hope? These were questions which couldn't be answered. The stranger had no idea about all of that. The only hope the stranger had was his sword. He walked further on. The stranger's sword was like a shell which completely protects the warrior inside.
