Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to curable compositions, and more specifically to poly(epoxy functional) compositions suitable for use in certain applications requiring improved curing performance. 2. Description of the Prior Art Poly(epoxy) polymers are often used as adhesives, which are employed to bond various substrates together. However, poly(epoxy) polymers are not readily curable by heating, thereby requiring an appropriate curing system.

Most such systems currently in use are two-component systems requiring mixing prior to application, which is time-consuming and impractical for a number of uses, including many in the automotive industry. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,904,559 to Swanson et al. (the '559 patent), there is described an adhesive composition comprising an epoxy resin and a combination of phenolic resin and polyhydroxyamino ether resin. The phenolic resin is preferably a novolac resin which is normally brittle when cured. The curing mechanism of the adhesive composition described in the '559 patent is initiated in one embodiment by hydrolysis of the polyhydroxyamino ether resin and in another embodiment by condensation of the phenolic resin with the epoxy resin. It would be desirable to provide a curable composition suitable for use in many types of bonding applications that does not require mixing, to eliminate the time-consuming and messy required mixing procedure, and which is available as a one-part system. A classical multi-output (hereinafter 'MO') control approach is based on the identification of the mathematical structure of the control law and by tuning the control parameters to achieve the control objectives. The tuning is achieved by the search of an optimal parameter configuration (i.e. of the optimum value of the parameter and of its optimal relative-position with e79caf774b

The acquisition of the ability to cause cholera is preceded by an increase in the synthesis of polysaccharides and in the turnover of lipopolysaccharide in Vibrio cholerae. Furthermore, the presence of these two virulence factors is associated with the expression of a regulatory protein known as ToxR. This paper presents evidence indicating that this protein is a transcriptional activator whose target genes are those encoding the enzymes that synthesize the lipopolysaccharide and the exopolysaccharide. The amount of ToxR appears to be regulated by a balance between two phenomena: the synthesis of lipopolysaccharide and the turnover of lipopolysaccharide. In this way a small number of virulence-associated factors would be sufficient to activate the entire arsenal of virulence factors of V. cholerae. Many of the theories leading to this conclusion are no more than speculation, and there is no good evidence yet that they are actually true. But as increasingly little is actually known about this class of life, it is not unreasonable to consider their existence. This is not a theory about the reality of the afterlife. The afterlife is a reality and is accepted by most religions. It is a place where reward and punishment occur, and that place can be far less comfortable than this life. It is quite reasonable to believe that some people will never suffer from mental illness. The fact that mental illness is untreatable does not mean that the person is a lost cause - many mental illnesses are not untreatable, but they are not curable either. However, this does not make them less real
