Anticipating People's Moods Imagine you're a doctor working in a busy hospital. You're sitting with a patient who is under very serious stress. In a wide-eyed way, he tells you his life is in the toilet. He feels like a failed parent. He's mad, bitter, jealous, and he's being blamed for everything from a drowning child, to the farm, to his personal life. His feelings are all out of whack. For the first time, he tells you about his divorce and how his ex-wife is angry with him. He's bitter and depressed, and he wants to blame him for the divorce, for the fact that his kids will see their mother differently after she moves away, and for his own unmanageable anger. It's overwhelming for the patient, and that's why he came to you. He's already had a few episodes of depression, and his therapist told him he was at risk, but he's too angry to talk with her. So what do you do? How much information is enough? Are you putting your patient's mental health at risk? You may have to ask yourself, "What if I didn't know the answers to these questions?" In my book, Depression 101, I wrote about "self-care," which is knowing your own limits. I'll give you an example: I have a friend who's a doctor. Her friend has depression, so she doesn't want to tell him. She's afraid he'll stop taking his meds and he'll act on his feelings. My friend said, "If you tell him, you're setting him up to fail." So she just invites him over to have breakfast in bed. And she watches. She spends time with him. She notices if he seems more giddy or if he's more angry. She'll let him know if he's acting in a way that's more unusual. She can teach him self-care, so he doesn't act

"Stock Phone Firmware MT6580-NO.1.3.3.3(6.0.0.157) stable / 5" FIT (CiaoOS1.0) .Q: Angular 2 and app.component.html not rendering with templateUrl I am new to Angular 2 and recently started using Angular 2.0.0 and I've ran into a problem with templateUrl. Basically, I've started my project and when I went to app.component.html I have my first index.html which is not rendered at all. I put my index.html into a folder called "pages" and made the appropriate changes to my app.component.html file, however, nothing is being rendered. I'm using Angular CLI to compile and the only changes are the ones I have made in app.component.html Here is my folder structure: - app.component.html - -pages -index.html -home.html -contact.html - -scripts -app -main.css - -styles

-app -main.css Here is my app.component.html: Hotel App Welcome to the hotel system Here is my index.html inside the "pages" folder:
