I am reading through the Hibernate documentation for Caching and Hibernate. Hibernate ships with four default caching strategies: LRUCache, PSCache, CSHCache and DistributedLRUCache. My question is this. Are the default CachingStrategies (LRUCache, PSCache, CSHCache and DistributedLRUCache) good enough? What if I wanted a better strategy such as ehcache? Do you have any suggestions on what and if so, why? A: Using the default CachingStrategy is a good way to start using Hibernate without having to write a custom strategy. It allows Hibernate to manage the data for you, and if you have a lot of data, it will probably be better than a custom strategy for your specific data. I have used the defaults here, but you may have more specific needs for your environment or data. If you want to look at what else you can do with caching, look at Hibernate's SessionFactory API for the Cache's (as well as Query and ResultSet). The CachingStrategy documentation on Hibernate's site has a good summary of the different available strategies. Static and dynamic responses of the Achilles tendon-metatarsal ligament complex to perturbations. The response of the Achilles tendon-metatarsal ligament complex (AT-ML) to perturbation was assessed. Firstly, a single spring-loaded device was connected to the AT-ML complex through the plantar fascia. The system was excited to apply a series of displacement pulses, lin
