Need a break from all that life has to offer and just want to have some fun? Then Endless Maneuver might be just the game you were looking for. You are trapped on a platform with two buttons. Press the first one for the easy level and the second button for the difficult level. The level continues to grow as you reach higher. The game ends when the platform becomes too small to move around or when the second button gets pressed during the first minute. Game over. You have limited time on the platform and you need to gain the most points possible. At the beginning you have a health bar that limits the number of times you can use the two buttons during the level. You can only use the buttons once within a certain period of time. The longer the game goes on the more points you earn. The more time you have left at the end of the game, the greater the points you will receive for reaching the maximum. Game over. Skins: Basic (Default) Standard Custom Airborne Each skin provides a different look and feel to the game, when starting the game for the first time you will be given the basic skin. About the designer: This is my first game. The idea came to me when I was listening to a song "Endless love" by Alicia Keys. There is something about "endless love", which sounds very good. I thought about the idea and created my first small game. I started the project again. So far it's just the 1st level of difficulty. I hope you will enjoy playing the game. Here are the main properties of Endless Maneuver: Endless Platform Tutorial Storyline Each of these properties will bring something to the game that is unique for their respective versions. There is no progress bar in the original version. You can now find them on the Credits page of the game. The game contains 6 music files, the game files are also in a folder to facilitate downloading. Endless Maneuver - Easy Level. Endless Maneuver - Easy Level - Credits. Guided is a casual, team based multiplayer MMORTS (Multi-player Massively-Oriented Online Real Time Strategy) game, in which 2-5 players manage their own team of 3-5 "guilds" (5 is the maximum team size) fighting in arenas. Why "Guided"? - It's a casual game in which actions have consequences on "real time" (as in League of Legends) and all aspects of the game play are accessible to casual players. - Because it's a multiplayer game, this puts many situations in which it's possible to get a boost with your teammates, such as "ganging up" or "sucking up" to a better player and get them to fall in the ranks. - The game has good RTS (Real-time Strategy) tactical simulation, without the rough RTS-player-versus-player match and cut-throat rules of traditional RTS games. Gameplay: - It's a team-based game in which your main actions involve interacting with the people on the game, as well as placing traps and spells on the maps. - You'll be able to control basic "troops" such as archers, spearmen, mages, monsters and so on, but you'll also be able to control more powerful magical "goblins" such as Fire Wraiths and Ice Maidens. - The game has over 100 units and over 30 spells, as well as over 25 maps, each with between 3-5 floors. You can progress on each floor through creating points in-game, which is done by killing other players and/or monsters. - You can play through the 3-5 campaigns on 1-5 floors, including over 30 missions, and there are many random battles. Campaigns take you through a magical fantasy continent where you'll be able to find new units, spells, traps, as well as "guilds", and where you'll be able to level them up, gaining new options and more powerful troops and spells. - As you play, you'll have access to rewards that will help you in your game, such as gold, which can be used in the in-game market to buy units, spells and traps. - Guilds gather in "locations" where they can provide more of their own members to your guild in exchange for experience and gold earned. Every location can have a maximum of 7 members in it, giving a guild total of

What's new in Prison Run And Gun:

On lii -- Part 2 -- Let's Get It Straight by Mark Drapeau The New York Times reported an error on March 23 with a message that the dollar fell out of the world's bank reserves in a record $58 billion one-day sell-off. The idea that a country would let this be immediately noticed in the financial press is impossible; even the press is too busy covering the Chinese disaster to notice. The day before, they enthusiastically endorsed China's currency-rigging by perfecting the 'gold transfer' system which allows the Chinese to take in gold and then 'burn' it in their phony exchanges. Apparently, this was the only way China could hold onto the massive reserves they had amassed. Which leads us to today's brain fart -- China's supposedly losing the bank runs it was counting on to 'invest' in U.S. 'toxic assets' like the house of cards they are: ...Officials scrambled to quickly buy up an onramp that investors see as one of the most critical to protecting a money stream that some privately fear may be gone by the close. But the buyers continued to back away, leaving China on the hook to buy up even more extra currency reserves. "This is not a government that is going to make this investment simply because they see the opportunity," said economist Diana Stringer at RBS in St. Petersburg, Florida. "It's a reflection of the amount of reserves that are left and the political situation they see." The Chinese no doubt had bad time of it trying to replace their rapidly 'exhausted' assets. And the Chinese, as the NYT reports, piled even more reserves on the market: Asian stock markets, which reacted to the burst of selling on Friday with big losses, rallied sharply on Monday and fed optimism that central banks are willing to support their financial systems after the run on money markets in the United States and Europe... Dollar-based assets were heavily sold on Friday, sending down US stocks. The banks have coordinated a drive to replenish dwindling equity holdings, an effort that analysts said would not be easily undone. European and Asian stock markets jumped on Monday, with London markets edging toward their highest levels in six months. Quite telling, no? If the Chinese were politically likely to 'invest', then the markets would be long the gold and oil sectors (and nearly every stock exchange in the world is long oil, since they will most likely be '

X-Morph: Defense is an action shooter set in a futuristic cyberpunk world, where players will discover the hidden truth behind a secret project that has brought mankind to the brink of extinction. The project was initiated by the world's richest and most influential corporation, bent on taking control of the global biotechnological market through genetic engineering. Having secured the required technology, the corporation's scientists created a race of cyborg creatures known as "X-Morphs". The program was designed to replace human military personnel with superior cyborg warriors, allowing the corporation to conquer any nation in a single day. Opposing the corporation's military forces are a team of genetically modified superhumans. These "X-Morphs" are a less sophisticated class of cyborg and thus far have been unable to successfully challenge the armored power of their opponents. The player assumes the role of one of these X-Morphs, navigating the treacherous terrain and huge enemy force to liberate their headquarters and overthrow their enemies. X-Morph: Defense features an original concept, blending futuristic cyberpunk gameplay with elements of strategy and turn-based tactics. Key Game Features:

- 5 unique islands, each with a unique look and feel, full of exciting challenges and a plethora of cyborg-specific weapons
- Fight against hordes of enemies and beat your enemies to their core, securing their technology so you can take over their forces!
- Characters receive combat skills and additional combat abilities that can be upgraded through experience
- New enemy types ensure that no matter which route you choose you will have a satisfying and unique experience
- Features storyline similar to Fallout 3, with the twists and turns of the X-Morph franchise
- Choices matter! When you take an enemy "core" (the enemy's technology or core systems) down, you will choose a "side effect" which will alter the balance of power in one of the enemy's territories.
