Q: Indicating the query position in SQLite I have a table with string columns: id, name, attribute, attribute_id All 4 columns are of TEXT type. How do I SELECT the attribute in which the string starts (sqlite convention for SELECT)? A: SELECT * FROM table WHERE attribute LIKE '%string%' LIMIT 1; Works fine for me. Why didn't you use the above? Anyways, though, you can use offset for the next: SELECT * FROM table WHERE attribute LIKE '%string%' AND 1=2; It sounds as if your current method won't work since the single parameter does not specify a position in the whole row. Another way to select from a certain point is to select the id and then have you program print the row in your code instead of doing it using the database. For example: SELECT * FROM table WHERE id=1; In my code I show the specific line of code that I select the data. Alcohol consumption and the risk of breast cancer. Case-control studies of alcohol consumption and breast cancer risk in white women have produced inconsistent findings. This inconsistency could result from the inability of these studies to assess the effects of alcohol on subgroups of breast cancer based on age at diagnosis, extent of disease, hormone receptor status, or other pathological features. We tested the relation between consumption of alcohol and breast cancer risk in a cohort of young white women followed prospectively, and classified breast cancers into three subtypes by extent of disease, hormone receptor status, and age at diagnosis. We matched 1242 cases with women from the same cohort who were alive and free of cancer at the time the cases were diagnosed. Information on covariates, including physical activity, body mass index, and postmenopausal hormone use, was gathered at baseline. Compared with no alcohol consumption, risk was increased among women consuming moderate amounts of alcohol (1-2 drinks per day), but not among those consuming high amounts of alcohol (greater than 2 drinks per day). A summary odds ratio for the highest compared with the lowest category of consumption was 0.81 (95% confidence interval = 0.67-0.98). The relation was greatest for tumors of postmenopausal women and those that were not estrogen-receptor positive. Alcohol consumption was not associated with breast cancer risk in young women, but the effect was greatest for postmenopausal women and those with

The absence of outdoor settings for the vast majority of the population has led to their lack of development. In this program, the young, imaginative filmmakers from 16 to 18 years of age will be given creative license to the city, the countryside or any place in their own backyard, to do their film projects in fully controlled and safe settings. The students live together as a team in a single, large house. Each year they will take a break from the program and visit a city for two weeks. The program, which offers weekly trainings, will go through eight weeks, covering a wide range of topics, including lighting, sound, music, the development of a project, script writing, editing, and integration of media. The training will be done in a friendly, safe and collaborative environment, where the students will be guided and taught about sound engineering, digital cinematography, and film editing. They will be supported and encouraged by the students to explore their ideas, to develop their projects and to create personal artistic statements, which are a rich source of inspiration for the future as professional filmmakers. Founded in 1985, the Academy of Art University is a private, non-profit, four-year art and design college in San Francisco that offers degree programs in both fine art and design. It provides a rich support system, allowing the teenagers to develop and express their inner potential and creativity, in a safe environment. At the end of the program, the students have been able to successfully express their artistic visions and have a personal project to look back on as a result of the program." – Akiko Tomioka (President of MTC), the Academy of Art University "Thank you for the great work you did with our youth and I am proud to be a part of the team." – Shaun Michael, CEO of AsYou Wish Home This is great news! Not only will the children get a chance to be filmed, but now the world will have the opportunity to see some of their work. To view all of the projects, check out this playlist on the video on demand service Vimeo.
