F-stop A ratio used to measure the _lightness_ or _darkness_ of a photo. The higher the ratio, the lighter the image appears to be, and the lower the ratio, the darker the image appears. A properly exposed image will have an f-stop ratio of 2:1. This ratio means that images are twice as bright as they appear on a printed photo. The most commonly used f-stop setting is $f/4$. This will allow you to take a picture in dimly lit situations. The $f/4$ setting will allow light to enter the camera, but it will still let any noise from the image be suppressed. The lower the f-stop number, the less light comes into the camera. This will enable you to use lower ISO values and still get a sharp, noise-free image.
